Re: Labeling of GM Foods

We, as American investors and American consumers would like to discuss GM food research with you.

We think it is important to note that the British Medical Association, representing over 115,000 physicians are calling for a moratorium on the introduction of GM crops, noting increases in allergies, antibiotic resistant disease, and toxic side-effects.

The American consumer does not want the biotech and agribusiness companies to test GM safety on our families. We want labeling on all products, and pledges to stop selling GM products, until long term tests have been done, simulating human responses to each potential clone. We want these tests to face regulatory scrutiny.

Please note that the Swiss Environmental Agency rejected all GE corn and potato trials, citing that harmlessness cannot be demonstrated with the current scientific evidence and experience. The FDA needs to listen to the consumer's preference for non-GM foods.

Sincerely,

B. Davis
